Chapter 1 by Fellinious

The wind was rising, the ashes of my fallen comrades had polluted the already dense air.

I tried to get up, but it was difficult, the heavenly arrow had pierced my chest.

I was the the only one left.

I managed to get myself on my feet, but it was no use.

No sign of any of the camps were left.

I attempted to walk to the nearest city possible, and there he was, the man that had damned us all.

A traitor, the fallen angel saw me, surprised on how I survived, I grabbed the arrow out of my bloody chest, And, threw it like a tomahawk, hitting the man between the eyes.

As he fell to the ground, I ripped off his wings, and stripped him of his belongings.

Even with the wings, I was still at a major disadvantage, and had a long way to go.
